Historical Note

The English Origins Project was a project undertaken by researchers from Plimoth Plantation in 1984. The project was funded by an NEH Grant. The goal of the project was to gather information from towns and communities in England where the early settlers of Plymouth Colony lived before they migrated to America. The hope was to gather information to help create training manuals for the interpreters at Plimoth Plantation so that they could more accurately portray the early settlers. Plimoth Plantation is a living history museum where the interpreters provide the bulk of the information and knowledge about the 17th century settlement to the guests therefore accurate portrayal is very important. This project greatly improved interpretation and continues to benefit both interpreters and guests of the museum to this day.

The research focused on dialect, folklore, material culture, agriculture, architecture, and social history. The time period in which the project focused on was from roughly 1550 to 1630. Six researchers were sent to England in April 1984 to begin the relevant research for the project. The group of Plymouth settlers that the research focused on were from roughly 40-50 communities across England as well as Leyden, Holland.

When the researchers arrived in England in April of 1984 they began their process by meeting with a group of British scholars for advice and direction before splitting apart to conduct their individual research in the many communities across England. Questionnaires were created by the researchers for local advisors and consultants to fill out as one form of information gathering. Interviews were also conducted in each community with local historians or advisors.

All of the information gathered from the consultants, advisors and other sources were then compiled to make master manuals or guides pertaining to each family as well as each community on a whole.

Scope and Content

The English Origins Project material takes up two drawers in a wide filing cabinet. The material is broken down into brown accordion folders. Some folders hold the research for specific towns and others contain the research for specific people or families from the early Plymouth Colony. The first four folders contain general program information such as correspondence, travel information and drafts of the questionnaires. For these four general folders “a folder” is considered the green folder as a whole with manilla folders inside of it. After the first four general folders “a folder” is considered one single manilla folder.
