

A genealogical profile of Thomas Boreman

Birth: Nothing is known of Thomas Boreman's date or place of birth.

Death: Uncertain — see below.

Ship: Unknown

Life in England: If he is identical with the Thomas Boardman of Sandwich, then he had been living with a woman named Luce not then his wife, by whom he had a son left in England. If not, then he came from England most likely as a single man. He may have trained as a carpenter.

Life in New England: A Thomas Boreman appeared in the March 25, 1633, tax list for Plymouth. A Thomas Boreman, perhaps the same man, was hired during the March 13, 1634/5, court to construct the fort, indicating that he was a carpenter. Some of the subsequent records of the 1630s are inconclusive, but by 1643 it is clear that there are two men of virtually the same name in the colony, one in Barnstable and the other in Sandwich, and later Yarmouth. The "Thomas Boardman" of Sandwich in 1638 was a carpenter. The trade (if any) of Thomas Boreman/Burman of Barnstable is unknown. There is not enough evidence to determine which Thomas Boreman was in Plymouth in March 1633.

Family: Thomas Boreman of Barnstable married Hannah Annable about 1645 and had seven children. He died in 1663.

Thomas Boreman of Sandwich and Yarmouth married (1) Lucy ____ who died in 1676, and (2) Elizabeth (Rider) Cole. He had three children and died in 1689.

Where do I go from here?

Researching your family's history can be a fun, rewarding, and occasionally frustrating project. Start with what you know by collecting information on your immediate family. Then, trace back through parents, grandparents, and beyond. This is a great opportunity to speak to relatives, gather family stories, arrange and identify old family photographs, and document family possessions that have been passed down from earlier generations.

Once you have learned all you can from family members, you will begin to discover other sources. A wide variety of records can help you learn more about the lives of your ancestors. These include birth, marriage, and death records; immigration and naturalization records; land records; census records; probate records and wills; church and cemetery records; newspapers; passenger lists; military records; and much more.

When you use information from any source — an original record, a printed book, or a website — always be careful to document it. If you use a book, you should cite the author or compiler, the full title, publication information and pages used. Also be sure to record the author's sources for the information. If the author's sources aren't provided, you will have to try to find the original source. Many genealogical works contain faulty information, and the Internet also contains many inaccuracies. In order for your work to be accepted — by lineage societies and other genealogists — it must be properly documented.
